For months, board members and elected officials have asked if any CareerSource Tampa Bay employee benefitted financially from logging more placements. Administrators batted away the concerns, saying the incentive program was complicated and nobody made significant money from higher jobs numbers. "What did we get for those incentive dollars? Is it the thousands of jobs that were misreported?" County Commissioner and CSTB board member Sandy Murman asked.

County commissioners gave unanimous support to a proposal from Commissioner Les Miller to explore establishing a new museum, likely in downtown Tampa. It would showcase past and present African-American paintings, sculpture, jewelry, costume, and other art and crafts. The vote instructs county staffers to begin looking for potential sites on county and city of Tampa land or to seek land from a benefactor.
